Read collection overview

James K. Boyce, senior fellow at the Political Economy Research Institute at the University of Massachusetts Amherst and Professor Emeritus of Economics, received his B.A. from Yale University and doctorate from Oxford University. While an undergraduate, Boyce worked on a land reform and rural development program in India for two years. He completed his studies at Yale, designing an independent major in Agricultural Development, before returning to South Asia where he lived in a village in Bangladesh for a year. Out of this experience, Boyce and his partner, Betsy Hartmann, wrote and published the book, A Quiet Violence, which focused on the lives and perspectives of those who live in rural poverty. Throughout his career, he researched and wrote extensively on environmental economics. When Boyce joined the faculty at UMass Amherst in 1985, he established the first economics course on the topic called "the political economy of the environment." During his first sabbatical in the 1990s, Boyce was a Fulbright Scholar at the Universidad Nacional in Costa Rica, where he helped establish a master's program in sustainable development and ecological economics for Central America and the Caribbean. In addition to his focus on environmental economics, Boyce was active in the economics of violent conflict and peacebuilding. He traveled to El Salvador soon after the signing of the peace accords and was asked to lead the Adjustment Toward Peace project for the United Nations Development Program. Boyce continues to write about topics related to political economy and climate policy.

The collection is a rich resource documenting Boyce's research and professional contributions that include work on: South Asia with emphasis on irrigation and flood control; Africa; the Philippines; environmental topics such as climate policy, crop genetic diversity, Natural Assets Project, Toxic 100, Costa Rica; and peacebuilding, in particular in El Salvador. Publications and reports are contextualized within the collection through correspondence, drafts of writings, conference proceedings, and extensive notes and notebooks including those created on visits to Bangladesh.
