Read collection overview

Frankie "Ashbuloh" Ziths, born Frank Gumbs, Jr. on December 6, 1933 in the Bedford-Stuyvesant neighborhood of Brooklyn, was a vital member of the Black Panther Party, joining in the late 1960s. Ziths served as the official New York photographer for the Party's newspaper, The Black Panther, and covered the Panther 21 trial first for The Black Panther, then for Right On!, the East Coast Panther newspaper. As more of the members of the Harlem Branch were arrested and jailed or forced underground, Ziths kept the Branch's business and programs moving forward until it closed in 1981. One of the programs Ziths took over was the National Committee for the Defense of Political Prisoners, which raised awareness and funds to support political prisoners in the US. Through the NCDPP, Ziths maintained long-standing correspondences with incarcerated fellow activists and sent them money, often from his own pocket. In the late 1970s, Ziths began honing his skills as a photographer and became a respected New York paparazzi, eventually working as one of the city's most sought-after news photographers and a stringer for the Associated Press and The New York Times. Ziths died of lung cancer on December 31, 1990.

Prompted by his wife Barbara Dee Ziths (now Barbara Heller), who recognized the historical significance of the work of Black community activists in New York, Ziths began preserving material documenting the Panther 21 trial, and eventually the activities of the Harlem Branch of the Black Panther Party. Heller and Ziths saved all the material that was in the branch when it closed in 1981. The Frankie Ziths Collection includes administrative files, publications, posters, original artwork and layouts, and memorabilia from the Party's Harlem Branch, documenting the ideological split of the Black Panther Party in 1971 and support for the Black Liberation Army; administrative files and correspondence from the NCDPP; Ziths own notebooks and journals, including notebooks recording his experiences at the Panther 21 trial; and Ziths complete archive of photographic negatives, slides, and prints, representing his career as a paparazzi and press photographer and documenting activism in New York and elsewhere in the East Coast Black Panther Party community.

Background on Frankie Ziths

From his early work in the Black Panther Party and prisoner advocacy, to his later work as news and celebrity photographer, Frankie Ziths' work as photographer and activist located the political and cultural pulse of its time and responded in both image and action.

Born Frank Gumbs, Jr. on December 6, 1933 in the Bedford-Stuyvesant neighborhood of Brooklyn, Frankie "Ashbuloh" Ziths joined the Black Panther Party in the late 1960s. As a member of the Black Panthers, he organized the Party's legal aid, food, and clothing programs in New York City. He also worked as the New York photographer for Panther newspapers Right On! and The Black Panther, for which he covered the 1970-1971 trial of the Panther 21.

During the 1970s, as members of the Black Panther Party's Harlem Branch were arrested and jailed or moved underground, Ziths kept the Branch's programs moving forward. Most notably, Ziths took charge of the National Committee for the Defense of Political Prisoners (NCDPP), a Panther initiative which raised awareness and funds to support political prisoners. The NCDPP coordinated correspondence with inmates and kept prisoners informed about political activity on the outside. The NCDPP also worked to educate the larger community about the realities of incarceration, circulating mimeographed communications and press releases. As chair of the NCDPP, Ziths coordinated the efforts of defense committees, organizing community support for prisoners at court dates and demonstrations, working with prisoners' lawyers, and raising money for legal defense and prison commissary. Ziths maintained long-standing correspondences with incarcerated activists, sending prisoners reading material and money, often from his own pocket. Ziths resigned as NCDPP coordinator in 1975.

Prompted by his wife Barbara Dee, Ziths began preserving material documenting the Panther 21 trial. When the Harlem Branch of the Black Panther Party closed in 1981, Dee and Ziths gathered a trove of documents from the Harlem office for preservation.

In the late 1970s, Ziths worked as a New York City news photographer and paparazzo, eventually becoming one of the city's most sought-after news photographers as a stringer for the Associated Press and The New York Times. Ziths was lead AP and Times photographer at the Joel Steinberg murder trial and the Howard Beach and Bensonhurst murder trials. Ziths was also active as a celebrity photographer, and formed relationships with figures such as Brooke Shields, Billy Joel, and Mia Farrow. While the movement from Panther to paparazzo might seem radical, Ziths who found continuity in a careful documentation of celebrity culture, which, with its extravagance, represented an authentic facet of the American ethos. Ziths remarked in an interview that he "chose celebrity photography because that seemed to be where the nation's consciousness was" (Newsday, 1991). In addition to his widely published news and celebrity photography, Ziths was an incisive documentarian and street photographer. His remarkable body of unpublished documentary work represents a vital yet little-known part of his oeuvre.

Ziths continued working as a freelance photographer until shortly before his death, from lung cancer, on December 31, 1990. In the draft of a note to friends, penned four months before his death, Ziths sums up his life's work: "All my life since my preadolescent years, I have arduously struggled against all odds that the People, not the heroes and charismatic superstars our society keeps pumping our way to throw us off our balance, the everyday women and struggling masses are the real heroes whose destiny lie in our own hands" (July 29, 1990). The Frankie Ziths collection is the story of these people.

Scope of collection

The Frankie Ziths Collection chronicles two decades of activism and photography from the early 1970s to 1990. The collection is organized into five series: Black liberation movements; Personal and professional, Publications, Photographs and negatives, and Realia.

Series descriptions

Series 1. Black Liberation Movements

The Black Panther Party materials document the party's internal as well and public-facing sides. The party's inner workings are documented in organizational materials, communications, administrative files, membership materials, meeting minutes, party rules, and intake documents. Black Panther Party public communications include posters and fliers, often mimeographed for circulation, from the party's various housing, educational, antidrug, and protest initiatives. The trial of the Panther 21 is covered in pamphlets and an open letter from the defendants. In December 1972, following an objection to his distributing Right On!, the Black Panther Party newspaper, at a New York City courthouse, Ziths was found in contempt of court; a transcript of these legal proceedings is included. In addition to the Black Panther Party's Harlem Branch, there are documents from the Panthers' office in Dorchester, Massachusetts, and its international section in Algeria.

Official Black Panther Party publications gathered here include Black Community News Letter and pamphlets by party members such as Michael "Ceteway" Tabor and Eldridge Cleaver. There are mimeographed pieces of writing by and about Party members including Elmer Geronimo Pratt, Ruchell "Cinque" Magee, and Sundiata Acoli, along with two film scripts by Jamal Joseph. Black Community News Service (BCNS), the Black Panther Party's news agency, worked to circulate relevant news; the collection contains BCNS news releases, reports, position papers, and publications.

Ziths' work as coordinator of the National Committee for the Defense of Political Prisoners (NCDPP), a Black Panther Party initiative, is documented in correspondence with Black Panther Party members Sundiata Acoli, Kwesi Balagoon, Ashanti Alston, Jamal Joseph, Lorenzo Kom'boa Ervin, among many others incarcerated individuals, but also with prison administrators, and the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC). Ziths' NCDPP correspondence is marked by debate over the ideological underpinnings of political work and discussion of legal proceedings.

The series also includes administrative documents and advocacy materials in support of particular prisoners. NCDPP meeting minutes supplement Ziths' personal daily log of NCDPP activities from December 1971 to May 1972, during which time he prepared fliers, leafleted, and attended court hearings and demonstrations. Among the other NCDPP materials are several issues of official NCDPP publications, including the NCDPP Newsletter, which feature contributions from prisoners; fliers announcing demonstrations and fundraisers; legal documents and transcripts; mimeographed communications and press releases in support of prisoners such as Assata Shakur, Sundiata Acoli, and the New Haven Three; a position paper Ziths presented at General Assembly of National Council of Churches in Dallas in 1972; Assata Shakur's critique of the NCDPP; and Ziths' resignation letter of 1975.

Beyond the Black Panther Party, the collection documents dozens of activist campaigns and liberation organizations within the U.S. and abroad. Prominent among these is the Black Liberation Army (BLA), an underground, paramilitary group that split from the Black Panther Party. BLA materials gathered here include communiques, newsletters, study guide, flyers and paste-ups for flyers, and pamphlets authored by BLA members such as Sundiata Acoli. There are communications, poetry, and artwork by BLA member Assata Shakur, along with statements and flyers in her support. Other liberation organizations include Republic of New Africa, New African People's Organization, African National Prison Organization, and National Council of Churches. Prisoner defense committees are another subset of organizations; the collection contains materials from the Assata Shakur Defense Committee, Martin Sostre Defense Committee, Committee to Defend the Panther 21, Attica Brothers Legal Defense, and National Committee to Defend Dessie Woods, and many other groups. Prison uprisings, such as the 1971 uprising at Attica Correctional Facility, and the 1974 Bedford Hills Uprising, known as the August Rebellion, at Bedford Hills Correctional Facility for Women, catalyzed campaigns that are documented here in flyers and correspondence. The Puerto Rican independence movement is represented, as are campaigns against behavior modification and medical experimentation in prisons. One document, a petition to the World Court of the United Nations, written by prisoners, charges the United States government with violating of article five of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights by engaging in medical experimentation on prisoners.

Series 2. Personal and Professional

1970-1998

This series consists of Ziths' documentation of his activism, photography records, and personal correspondence, as well as writings about Ziths. In addition to an autobiographical manuscript [in this series?], Ziths' notebooks provide a record of his day-to-day work with the Black Panthers, and include a detailed record of the Panther 21 trial of 1970-1971. Memorial materials following Ziths' passing include tributes from colleagues and those he photographed over the years, including a note from musician Billy Joel, who wrote, "Frankie was always on the scene."

Series 3. Publications

1946-1998

The publications series contains a broad assortment of radical publications and pamphlets, many produced by the liberation organizations in the United States, as well as Canada, Bermuda, Central America, Palestine, and South Africa. This includes pamphlets such as Minimanual of the Urban Guerilla by Carlos Marighella and The Last SLA Statement by the Symbionese Liberation Army, and periodicals such as Midnight Special, Third World Editions, Arm the Spirit, Build, and New Solidarity. Periodicals include Black News: Agitate, Educate, Organize, The Black Scholar, and Arm the Spirit.

Series 4. Photographs and negatives

1972-1990

Series 4 comprises the collection and contains Ziths' photographic work, with its beginnings documenting East Coast Black Panther Party community, and continuing into his career as a news, paparazzi, and documentary photographer. Early work includes photographs of a Freedom March in Tupelo Mississippi, coordinated by The United League, a Black civil rights group which organized boycotts and demonstrations in opposition to police violence and the Ku Klux Klan. The march was attended by Black Panther Party members, as well Black activists from cities across the U.S.

As a freelance photographer, Ziths worked for the Associated Press and The New York Times. His photographic subjects ranged from politicians, including David Dinkins, Ed Koch, and Ted Kennedy; celebrities, such as Lena Horne, Diana Ross, Harry Belafonte, Al Pacino, and Christie Brinkley; public figures, such as Al Sharpton, Jesse Jackson, and Donald Trump; and faith leaders, such as Mother Teresa, Desmond Tutu, and Daniel Berrigan.

While photographs of politicians, public figures, and celebrities form the bulk of Ziths' work, Ziths' photography also included a significant documentary component. Ziths was a perceptive documentarian of his home of New York City, and his photography of the lives, struggles, and protests of ordinary people account for many of his most powerful images. When, as a news photographer, he covered the 1980 Democratic National Convention and photographed politicians such as Ted Kennedy, Charles Rangel, Ed Koch, Ziths also walked outside the convention to photograph protestors demonstrating and unhoused citizens sleeping on the street. Ziths frequently photographed the actor and model Brooke Shields, but he also photographed a man who, on a park bench, had erected an elaborate shrine to Shields, fixing photographs torn from magazines to sheets of discarded cardboard. This incisive body of documentary work, largely unpublished, forms a necessary counterpoint to Ziths' news and celebrity photography. Taken as a whole, one sees in Ziths' photographic work a valuation of all of humanity.

Other photographic work includes a Black Panther reunion, family and friends, cityscapes, and still lifes. There are several photographs of Ziths, as well: one captures Ziths on the job photographing Filipino politician Imelda Marcos. Another, by New York Times fashion photographer Bill Cunningham, finds Ziths with Barbara Dee on a motorcycle.

Series 5. Realia

ca. 1970-1976

An assortment of Ziths' belongings that reflect his professional and political activity constitute the final portion of the collection. These belongings include Ziths' camera, wall hangings and flags, a martial arts gi from the Black Cypher Academy, political pins, and a well-used mimeograph machine. Several audiocassettes contain recordings from the Panther 21 trial.
