Read collection overview

Born on December 13, 1887, Gladys Theodora Parrish to wealthy birthright Quaker Alfred Parrish and Katharine Broadwood Jennings. Gladys married Constant Davis Huntington on October 17, 1916, who had been chairman of the London office of G. P. Putnam's publishing company since 1905. The couple first resided in Hyde Park Gardens in London and then at Amberley House in Sussex. They had one daughter on January 11, 1922, Georgiana Mary Alfreda (Urquhart). Gladys Huntington wrote many plays and novels, including the bestselling book Madame Solario, published anonymously in 1956. Other published titles include; Carfrae's Comedy (1915, novel), Barton's Folly (1924, play), and Turgeniev (c. 1930, play). She died at St. George's Hospital (Westminster) on May 31, 1959, at the age of 71.

The Gladys Huntington Papers is primarily composed of the correspondence of Gladys Huntington with her mother, Katharine "Kate" Parrish, husband Constant, daughter Alfreda, various friends, relatives, and professional contacts. Additionally, the collection contains a sizable amount of Gladys' correspondence and traded manuscripts, short stories, poetry, and drafts with fellow authors such as Leo Myers, Nicolo Tucci, Helen Granville-Barker, Viola Mynell, Eric Clough Taylor, Cynthia Asquith, Clifford Bax, and others. Many of her own manuscripts and typed drafts of novels and plays (Madame Solario, Turgeniev, her unfinished final work, The Ladies' Mile), along with childhood writings, photo albums, datebooks, and diaries spanning her lifetime are contained within the collection.

Background on Gladys Huntington

Background note by Laura Haskell and Catherine Peerson.

Gladys Theodora Parrish was born on December 13, 1887, in Philadelphia, PA to wealthy birthright Quaker Alfred Parrish and Katharine Broadwood Jennings. Gladys married Constant Davis Huntington on October 17, 1916, who had been chairman of the London office of G. P. Putnam's publishing company since 1905. The couple first resided in Hyde Park Gardens in London and then at Amberley House in Sussex. They had one daughter on January 11, 1922, Georgiana Mary Alfreda (Urquhart). Gladys Huntington wrote many plays and novels, including the bestselling book Madame Solario, published anonymously in 1956. Other published titles include; Carfrae's Comedy (1915, novel), Barton's Folly (1924, play), and Turgenev (c. 1930, play). During her lifetime, Gladys exchanged hundreds of letters between family members, friends, writers, and many prominent figures of upper-class European and American society. Despite claims that Gladys committed suicide, no conclusive evidence has been found within this collection. According to her death certificate, Gladys died at St. George's Hospital (Westminster) on May 31, 1959, at the age of 71 from cerebral thrombosis due to atheroma.

Of all the family members, Gladys Parrish Huntington (1887-1959) arguably found the most literary success, although she would only be recognized for it over three decades after she was revealed as the author of the bestselling 1956 novel Madame Solario. This revelation came quietly a few months after the anonymous novel's publication; Life Magazine reported in its March 18, 1957 edition (which itself cites an earlier article in the London Express that had revealed Gladys's identity) that "the author was an elderly literary gentlewoman...living in the backwater of Kensington." Yet, speculation continued for decades. Acclaimed British author Mary Renault, in an interview with The American Scholar in 1970, claims Madame Solario to be "one of the finest novels of our century," going on to say: "After many inquiries in the publishing world, I learned the author was called Constance Huntington." Not quite. A 1992 French mystery novella entitled Qui a Écrit Madame Solario? made the bizarre claim that Winston Churchill was the author. Bernard Cohen's extensive research, published in the French newspaper Libération in 2009, is widely credited for definitively solving the not-so-mysterious mystery, although the novel had been published with Gladys's name on the cover as early as the 1980s. The real mystery is why no one noticed.

Easily regarded as her magnum opus, Madame Solario drew high praise from writers and critics, including comparisons to the prose of Henry James, Edith Wharton, and E. M. Forster. Over half a century following its publication, the allure of the story persists, inspiring a 2012 French film adaptation of the provocative tale of incest and social scandal, as well as translations into seven languages. The novel's consideration of such taboo topics has often been speculated to be the reason for which Gladys chose to conceal her identity as the author upon the initial publication. She published under the name Gladys Parrish as early as 1915 with her novel Carfrae's Comedy, published by Putnam while Constant was at its head. Her play Barton's Folly was produced a decade later, receiving an overall unenthusiastic critical response. A packet of reviews of the play's production we came across consistently categorized it as a disappointment, but recognized the sign of a talented new voice. "The play had that "something" which justified its performance by The Three Hundred. It lay in the dramatist's sense of the interesting complexity of human relations. Though inexpert, confused, and full of bugbears, Barton's Folly is the work of an imagination. I found it often absurd, but never dull," wrote leading literary critic Desmond McCarthy, who would go on to become a close friend of Gladys. She did not publish or produce again for over 30 years, perhaps taking the time to hone her skill and voice as a writer. These efforts were well spent, for two of her stories were subsequently published in The New Yorker in 1952 and then again in 1954 under the name G.T. Huntington, a vague enough stylization of her married name to obfuscate both her gender and any connection to what she previously published. Whether or not this was her intention is unclear, for the runaway success of Madame Solario a few years later established Gladys, by this point in her 70s, as a brilliant new literary voice.

Scope of collection

The Gladys Huntington Papers is primarily composed of the correspondence of Gladys Huntington with her mother, Katharine "Kate" Parrish, husband Constant, daughter Alfreda, various friends, relatives, and professional contacts. Letters from Lilly St. Agnan Barrett Huntington to her son Constant also occupy a large portion of the collection. Additionally, the collection contains a sizable amount of Gladys' correspondence and traded manuscripts, short stories, poetry, and drafts with fellow authors such as Leo Myers, Nicolo Tucci, Helen Granville-Barker, Viola Mynell, Eric Clough Taylor, Cynthia Asquith, Clifford Bax, and others. Many of her own manuscripts and typed drafts of novels and plays (Madame Solario, Turgenev, her unfinished final work, The Ladies' Mile), along with childhood writings, photo albums, datebooks, and diaries spanning her lifetime are contained within the collection.

There are letters from soldiers on the front lines in both World Wars, some thanking Mrs. Huntington for her generous care packages, others from personal acquaintances, as well as to Constant from friends serving abroad (most notably, Gerald Wellesley, 7th Duke of Wellington, who served at the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel in WWII, sent many letters and photographs detailing his experiences during the war). Letters regarding the deaths of some relatives fighting in the wars, including Henry Blair Keep, married to Gladys' niece, Katharine Jennings Legendre (Keep) Biddle, who was KIA in WWI. Included in letters to and from family members are Constant's dispute with his brother, James Lincoln Huntington, over the sale of "40 Acres" in Hadley during the 1950s; a dramatic exchange over Alfreda's marriage to Brian Edward Urquhart in 1944; a genealogical summary of the Urquhart family written by Murray McNeil Caird Urquhart, Brian's father, to Constant; correspondence and notes on Constant's genealogical research of his mother's family, the St. Agnan's in Trinidad; and the settlement of Gladys' estate following her death in 1959.

Series descriptions

Series 1. Correspondence

Correspondence of Gladys Huntington and her husband Constant Huntington, chairman of G. P. Putnam's Sons Publishing London branch. Gladys exchanged thousands of letters during her lifetime with myriad friends and family, a bulk of the collection consists of letters between Gladys and her mother, Katharine Broadwood Jennings Parrish and husband Constant. Some interesting but less substantial exchanges found in this series include many prominent authors of the time, including Niccolo Tucci, Leo Myers, Helen Granville-Barker and more; various suitors such as Eric Taylor Clough, Chauncey Graven Hackett, and Alexander B.; exchanges between publishers, editors, and friends of high society such as Stephanie Luce, Lady Asquith, and Viscountess Astor; and a brief dispute over the marriage of Gladys' daughter Georgina Mary Alfreda to Brian Urquhart. Letters to and from Constant include a sizable number from his mother, Lilly St. Agnan Barrett Huntington; exchanges between friends deployed in WWI to Constant and Gladys such as George Hill, Charles Davis Morgan, various thank-you letters [Box 8], and the death of Henry Blair Keep; WWII including Lieutenant-Colonel Gerald Wellesley, 7th Duke of Wellington.

Series 2. Writings

Various manuscripts and drafts of the many plays, novels, and short stories Gladys wrote during her lifetime including the best seller Madame Solario, Carfrae's Comedy, The Ladies Mile, Turgenev, Giulino di Mezzegra: 1948, The Ancestral House, The Borrowed Life, and more. There are also exchanged copies of writings by other authors in which Gladys kept in contact with including Niccolo Tucci's "The Wind," "Of the Story that Sailed Away," and "Of the Little Girl Who was Left."

Series 3. Personal

Includes a number of travel journals, scrapbooks, family photo albums, datebooks, and several issues of "The Club Monthly," a monthly journal put together by Gladys and her friends at the end of the 19th century; a travel journal written by Constant during a horseback riding trip with a friend after his graduation; correspondence between Constant and contacts in Trinidad detailing the St. Agnan family history; correspondence between Constant and Murray Urquhart detailing Urquhart family history; a number of bills and receipts from 1951-1954 collected for a tax audit, and a substantial lost luggage claim.

Series 4. Legal Papers

Correspondence between Constant Huntington and his brother, James Lincoln Huntington disputing ownership rights that held up the sale of "40 Acres" in Hadley, Massachusetts, as well as various lawyers involved in the dispute. Also in this series are a number of Last Will and Testament documents from several family members including Lilly St. Agnan Barrett Huntington, Mary Parrish Starr, Samuel Gellineau, and Charles Gellineau; the estate settlement of Gladys Huntington; and the official death certificate of Gladys Huntington, 1887-1959.
