Background on Boston Jazz Society

Founded in 1973, the Boston Jazz Society grew from a small group of jazz enthusiasts listening to music in living rooms to a thriving organization that “kept Jazz alive” in New England. As Jazz’s popularity began to fade in the late 1960s, local Jazz societies formed to provide support to artists and give them the means and venues to continue to perform on the road. The Boston Jazz Society was originally inspired by one of the earliest, the Left Bank Jazz Society of Baltimore. Like the Left Bank, BJS produced concerts in clubs, theaters, and hotels but expanded their efforts to include exhibits, television and radio shows, and a Jazz education program for grade school students. The longest running BJS activities, however, were the annual Jazz Barbecues and the BJS Scholarships, both of which were started in 1975. The Jazz Barbecues were outdoor jazz performances that happened every year in early August where a variety of both professional and student musicians performed, including some recipients of the BJS scholarship. The scholarship program raised funds for young Jazz musicians to attend the New England Conservatory of Music’s Jazz Department and the Berklee School Of Music and began the musical careers of many important musicians, composers, and teachers. BJS was also deeply connected to the local music scene, celebrating Roxbury, Mass. natives Alan Dawson and Roy Haynes, whose brother Vincent was a long-time board member, among many others. After 42 years of promoting Jazz music in Boston, the Boston Jazz Society, Inc. dissolved in 2015.

Scope of collection

The records of the Boston Jazz Society document the history of the organization from its beginnings in the 1970s to 2013, just before its demise in 2015. The majority of the collection dates from the 1980s/1990s and illustrates BJS programming and administrative activities. The collection documents the work of BJS through correspondence, financial reports, meeting notes, membership logs, grant applications, and clippings. There are also resumes, demos, and promotional photographs from performers who wished to perform at BJS events. The audio visual series contains photographs, video and audio documentation of a wide variety of BJS events. There is also a small research series that contains two volumes of a jazz discography. The bulk of the BJS records were donated by founding member and longtime president Aureldon Edward Henderson and represents his involvement in promoting jazz in the Boston area.
